Rubble stands now on 16th Street where Sacramento Mayor Kevin Johnson managed his 2008 mayoral campaign.

East Sacramento News writer is first at calamitous scene Mayor Kevin Johnson's former campaign headquarters collapses

By LANCE ARMSTRONG East Sacramento News Writer vcnnews@valcomnews.com

As a reporter covering many miles throughout the Land Park, Pocket, East Sacramento and Arden-Carmichael areas, it is not always known exactly where my travels will lead me from week to week.

Furthermore, it is often a mystery who I will speak to and what I will see along my many daily journeys.

But few incidents can compete with what I saw on the afternoon of May 19, as I stood outdoors about a half-block from one of the most unusual scenes that I have come across throughout my career as a journalist.

At about 2 p.m., I heard the familiar sounds of screeching tires that are not uncommon along the major city thoroughfare, 16th Street.

Sometimes these sounds are followed by another sound - the impact of one automobile colliding with another automobile.

But in this incident, I heard a sound that was unlike any automobile accident that I have ever heard in the past.

After hearing the usual automobile verses automobile impact sound, this sound was almost immediately followed by what I could best describe at the then-sight-unseen moment as the sound of an extremely large load of heavy supplies being knocked off a large flatbed delivery truck.

Racing by foot to the scene at the northwest corner of 16th and U streets, I discovered a large, white delivery truck amidst a huge pile of bricks.

To my astonishment, the entire front portion of the building, which was most recently the site of Mayor Kevin Johnson's campaign headquarters and was at the time vacant, had been completely destroyed.

A few moments later, I noticed that behind the truck was a second vehicle, which was partially submerged in brick.

I later heard that the truck, which was heading north on 16th Street, had struck the building following a collision with the much smaller vehicle, which was traveling west from U Street.

As the dust began to settle, it was only a short period of time before emergency vehicles arrived at the scene, the drivers of the vehicles were attended to and 16th Street was temporarily closed near the scene of the accident.

Fortunately, several outdoor diners at the popular Harry's Café, located next door to the collapsed building, were quick on their feet, as they raced to safety just prior to their table and chairs being overturned. In all, three tables and nine chairs were overturned and one table and three chairs were destroyed.

After accident aftershock

With tears in his eyes and visibly shaken by the incident, Harry Luong, the cafés owner, told me that his son, Sam, and three of his co-workers were among the people sitting at the table.

About an hour later, still shocked by the accident, Luong said to me, "I'm still shaking."

Although no fatalities occurred from the accident, the incident was undoubtedly a very scary moment for those involved.

The accident also resulted in the partial loss of a historic landmark along this portion of the former Highway 40, since the now-collapsed building, which was constructed in 1929, originally housed an early Safeway grocery store.

Although the front part of the building now rests as a pile of bricks behind a chain linked fence and everyday life continues in the area, Luong and others who were there on this unusual Tuesday afternoon understand that with this tragedy comes a very important result.

"It may have been a tragic moment, but we were very fortunate that nobody lost their lives," Luong said.

In retrospect of this incident, Luong suggests that the city consider placing stoplights at the intersection of 16th and U streets.

"I've seen many accidents here - many of which have gone unreported – so, I think stoplights here would be a very good thing."

No new high school for East Sacramento SCUSD decides to hold off on the promise of a new high school

By MIRANDA MENESTRINA East Sacramento News Writer vcnnews@valcomnews.com

Faced with the momentous task of cutting millions out of their budget and the difficult decision to close four schools, the Sacramento City Unified School District has also resolved not to open a new high school in East Sacramento something that's been promised since they closed Sacramento High in 2003.

"It's not forgotten, but, at least for awhile, there are no immediate plans to move forward (with the opening)," said SCUSD Communications Officer, Maria Lopez.

The resolution to open a new high school was the result of a consent decree that came about after parents and the teachers union sued the district for closing Sacramento High School.

The closure

Receiving state funding due to underperformance issues, Sacramento High was shut after it failed to meet specific targets for two years in a row. Unfortunately, the closure of the historic school, the second oldest high school west of the Mississippi, left the students of College Greens, East Sacramento, Midtown, Oak Park, River Park and Tahoe Park without a traditional neighborhood high school.

And while the site became the new home for St. Hope, a public charter school, parents pleaded to have the district open a new high school nearby that that offered all the extracurricular activities that they believed every high school student should be entitled to.

However, six years after the fact, that high school still doesn't exist.

District Efforts

The guidelines of the consent decree required SCUSD to open a small (roughly 500-800 students), comprehensive high school within two miles of the former Sacramento High's attendance area. In 2005, the district surveyed the involved neighborhoods, came up with several sites that could work and discussed ideas with the community.

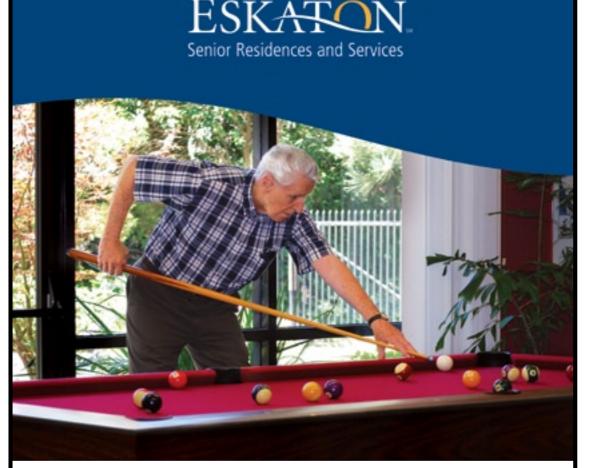

In 2008, the conclusion was to renovate and use

See School, page 23

The historic halls of Sacramento High once housed East Sacramento students. Since the school's conversion into a charter school in 2003, the East Sacramento region has been left without a high school.

A day for the dogs Four-legged friends rejoice: Sutter's Landing Dog Park opens

By BENN HODAPP East Sacramento News Writer vcnnews@valcomnews.com

When the landfill known as Sutter's Landing closed its doors in 1992, the city of Sacramento was left with an area full of promise but lacking direction. An important step in fulfilling the land's potential was unlocked on May 23 with the opening of the Sutter's Landing Dog Park.

A crowd of hundreds piled through the gates with their canine friends, ready to experience something that was a long time coming.

"There was a pent up demand for this," said local resident and City Attorney Eileen Teichert. "People around here who have small properties need this."

Teichert was joined in the festivities by Jackson, her five-year-old Pug who clung to her side and scoped out the goings on.

District 3 councilmember Steve Cohn was on hand for the ribbon-cutting ceremony, and he explained how the park came into being.

The general idea for a park was hatched in 1994, he said. The cleaning out of the remains of the landfill took some time, but in 1999, the park began to take shape. A bike trail was one of the first steps.

In 2005, Cohn said, the city started thinking more specifically into what the park would offer. Thanks to a $2.5 million check from the Capital Reinvestment Fund as well as lease revenue from billboards on I-80, there was enough money to put the plan into effect.

Construction began early this year, but it was more than meets the eye. Much of the process of turning a landfill into a dog park goes unseen because it happens underground.

The asphalt floor of the landfill was lined with layers of clay, soil and bark to ensure full drainage of all water. The trees that dot the park are the first to grow in the lot in more than 100 years, boasted Cohn. On the Cover: City Attorney Eileen Teichert and Jackson the Pug at the new Sutter's Landing dog park. (East Sacramento News Photo/Benn Hodapp)

Jackie Kuhwarth, founder and president of the Sacramento Dog Owners Group (sacdog.org), was one of the biggest advocates of the park. Despite the fact that the park shrunk from a proposed 17 acres down to its current three-acre size, Kuhwarth is pleased with the start. She said that she and her two Basenjis, Ben and Cooper, will utilize the park a great deal.

The park consists of two fenced-in areas. One area is for dogs up to 25 pounds and the other is for larger dogs over 25 pounds. Each section has been landscaped to have hills and ample running room for the curious critters. The three-acre park is the largest in Sacramento according to Cohn.

Dog day morning

The opening was a huge success, as seemingly hundreds of dogs couldn't wait to charge through the gates and mingle with their four-legged brethren. Well, mostly four-legged, that is.

One of the stars of the show was two-year-old Rottweiler Cain who was born with a deformity on his front left paw. His owners, Kim Kearsing and Abby Maurer, explained the process that led to their dog's starring appearance.

"The vet told us that the best thing to do would be to amputate his leg," Kearsing said.

Cain has been hobbled for nearly a year now, but he doesn't even seem to notice. He sprinted along happily with 160-pound Great Dane buddy Oliver who treated Cain like part of the family.

The dogs that showed up ranged from handbag-riding Chihuahuas to the largest dog in attendance, a 185pound Great Dane named Coco, who was accompanied by "big" sister Piddles, a tiny terrier that was no more than 10 pounds.

Dave Katten and Ruby, his five-year-old Corgi, were out enjoying the festivities as well. Katten lives a block away from the park and he is delighted with how it looks.

"We're going to come down here every day," he said.

Despite the great start to the park, Cohn said that this is just the beginning for Sutter's Landing. By next spring there will be courts for basketball, bocce ball and handball; a restroom to replace the current portable toilets; and further beautification processes to cover up the remaining vestiges of the park's former use.

Cohn said that when the park is fully developed, it will be the size of Golden Gate Park in San Francisco. Time will tell if that becomes a reality, but on this day at least, it was a wonderful dog day afternoon.

Sutter's Landing is on 28th street past C Street and just past the railroad tracks.

Reshaping Panama Pottery From the rich, dark clay of the earth: Art springs forth

By BENN HODAPP East Sacramento News Writer vcnnews@valcomnews.com

A piece of Sacramento history nearly 100 years old is getting ready to make a change, but with a promise of upholding tradition.

Panama Pottery has been making terra cotta pottery since 1914 and has operated out of its home on 24th Street for all of those 95 years. The shop currently sells pottery by both retail and wholesale, but it has become clear that a change has to be made.

'We cannot make money in wholesale production any longer," said production manager Chuck Owens. "We try to maintain an inventory, but some things are impossible to make into a profit."

Because of this, the business is shifting its focus more onto the artistic part of the business rather than the wholesale portion. Owens explained that in the coming months the business will found a non-profit organization that will serve to promote local artists at the ic change from wholesale site.

The organization will lease out access to the studio for a price between $50-$100 per month for artists to come, work and hopefully sell their products. Artists will have a personal locker and access to the studio 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

The works that are done on the site can be sold either in the shop or in the courtyard that is lined with professional artistic works.

In addition to the promotion of local artists, the nonprofit organization will begin teaching educational pottery classes for all interested. Owens said that the fees for the classes are not set, but the program will consist of four two-hour classes and there will be a separate class for children and adults.

Owens and manager Glenn Takai both hold Masters of Fine Arts degrees and will be the instructors of the classes.

to artistry, the retail portion of the shop will remain intact, according to general manager Carol Honda.

"We will be building retail as well," she said. "The only thing we are cutting down on is wholesale."

Honda also said that the current practice of having tour groups from schools and other facilities will continue as always. The tours wind through the facility and introduce patrons to the kiln that fires the pottery at 2,000 degrees for as long as two days. It also includes a tour of the courtyard that is peppered with works of art that are for enjoying or, if something strikes your fancy, buying. All items are labeled with the artist's name and the price. Items for sale in the shop and the courtyard range in price anywhere from $8 to well over $1,000. "We consider the time it took and the amount of creativity involved when setting prices," Takai said.

Both Takai and Owens have works of their own on display that are available to admire or own.

Honda said that they will always welcome custom orders and that the customer service side of the business will remain strong. Takai said that they enjoy doing special projects and that they encourage new ideas.

As far as how artists should go about inquiring about studio access, Honda said that she thinks it is beneficial for them to come down to the site and see for themselves what it has to offer.

While the business will no doubt run differently than it does and has for 95 years, it is of vital importance to the people who work there to uphold the traditions that it has long held.

"The equipment is all 19th century developed and the job is very labor intensive," Takai said. "We are very unique in that (the business) is a picture into the past of this industry."

Funding the future

Another way that the business intends to stay true to tradition is by holding what Owens calls the annual "blowout sale" on June 6 and 7 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"There are people that have shopped here for many decades," Owens said. "This is our way of honoring our long-time clientele."

During the spring and summer months the shop is open seven days a week. Monday through Friday the hours are 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. and on weekends from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Schools who would like to tour the facility can call the office at (916) 452-7181. Know your neighbor Heavy metal and high art comes to life at Fe Gallery

Thanks to an organization created by the city of Sacramento, art lovers can stroll about the streets of East Sacramento and get their fill of all things artistic. The Second Saturday Art Walk is a way for local artists to have their works seen, enjoyed and possibly even sold to admiring patrons. The second Saturday in June falls on the 13th, and East Sacramento's Fe Gallery is one of many art houses participating.

Located at 1100 65th St., the Fe Gallery (the letters "f" and "e" represent the elemental symbol for iron) has been in business since October 2007 and has quickly found a niche by bringing local artists together to show their works to the community.

Millie Porter, curator and co-owner with husband and metal artist Stephan Lyman, talked about why the gallery onstrations," she said. "People are fascinated by our metal workshops and I think people are going to love the glass blowing demonstration (in June). It also allows people to see what a working metal studio looks like.

The gallery has two artists in residence (Lyman and fused glass artist Sheena Wolfe) whose work is shown at all times. Each month the gallery selects a number of local artists to be featured in the gallery for that month. In May, the gallery showed the work of photographer Rudy Calpo and glass artist Phil Teefy.

June's featured artists are bronze sculptor Darby Patterson, painter Lynnette Diem and blown glass artist Rene Steinke.

Diem, whose displayed works will be a series of paintings of river rocks, spoke of her inclusion in the gallery's event. She said that she submitted slides of her work to the gallery and it went to the gallery's jury that decides who to accept and who to deny.

She received her master's degree in art from Cal State Northridge and currently teaches art at Davis High School. She said that she has been an artist for more than 20 years, then conceded that "it's actually closer to 30 now."

Her 15 selected works will be on display and for sale at the gallery (the pieces range in price from $300-$1,200 according to Diem), but she hopes that at the very least people enjoy the experience of seeing her art.

"I think people will enjoy the tranquility of my work," she said.

Lyman, the resident metal artist, started his work as an artist in 1978. He told the story of his background with metal art and how he got started.

"I'm 56 and my dad had a (metal) shop my whole life. I was around it ever since I was about four years old. I was employed by the time I was 11."

Lyman will have what he calls "utilitarian and functional art" on display in June. His pieces will be for sale as well and the prices range from $35 to $5,000.

As far as his side of running the business, Lyman cracked that "Millie handles all the interested artists who want to be showed. I'm just an artist, I do the fun stuff."

Porter, who prefers to think of herself as someone who does "a little of this and a little of that" rather than a curator, said that there are more reasons to come out and enjoy Second Saturday at Fe Gallery. The gallery offers appetizers such as cheese, grapes, crackers and wine. For the meat-loving section of the populace, there is a tri-tip smoker on the premises that also makes an appearance.

June's installment in the Second Saturday franchise will include a sculpting demonstration by bronze sculptor Patterson and a glass blowing demo by Steinke. The demos will take place during Second Saturday hours, which are from 6 to 9 p.m.

The gallery is an extension of Fence World Iron World at 1100 65th Street in Sacramento. Those wishing to see the artistic works but are unable to make it out for Second Saturday can visit the gallery during regular daytime hours, which are from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, and most Saturdays from 10[°] a.m. to 12 p.m.

For more information on the Fe Gallery, you can go online at www.fegallery.com or call (916) 456-4455. Information about the Second Saturday Art Walk and other galleries included within it is available at www.2nd-sat.com.

Sacramento State professor's talent takes center stage

Special to the East Sacramento News

Teacher, tutor, singer, star—it's all the same for Sacramento State professor Robin Fisher.

Robin Fisher, a Sacramento State music professor and accomplished opera singer, performed Samuel Barber's "Knoxville, Summer of 1915" in a concert last week presented by The Academy at All Hallows Orchestra and Chorus in Sacramento.

Fisher, a soprano who has performed to critical acclaim in such cities as Paris, Vienna, Prague, Hamburg, Chicago and Dallas, is currently on sabbatical from Sacramento State.

This spring, she made several Northern California appearances, including her debut with the Sacramento Opera as Susanna in Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," and a performance with the Townsend Opera Players as Pamina in Mozart's "The Magic Flute."

She also sang the soprano solos in Mendelssohn's "Elijah" with not far from the Sacramento State the UC Davis Symphony and Chorus at the Mondavi Center for the Performing Arts; performed a program of late-Renaissance music from England with the Sex Chordae Consort of Viols at Sacramento State; and sang an all-Bach concert with the Sacramento Choral Society and Orchestra at the Mondavi Center and at Las Positas College in Livermore.

The musicians that participated in last week's performance included Sac State students and some faculty. Among them, Julie Anne Miller, a 2006 alumna who is Fisher's replacement while she's on leave, sang a solo, and Ryan Murray, a 2008 alumnus and assistant conductor at the Academy at All Hallows, conducted one piece, Antonio Vivaldi's "Gloria," says Peter Nowlen, the academy's artistic director and a horn instructor at Sacramento State.

Fisher noted that The Academy at All Hallows performs at a venue campus, making it possible for closer interaction with students and University music patrons to take part in the many events.

"Students sing in the choir and play in the orchestra, providing them with valuable professional performing experience," she said. Because the academy emphasizes outreach education for school-age children, Sac State students who perform are able to share their musical talent with the young audiences, still so impressionable and eager to see young people playing classical music. It is a wonderful way to showcase Sac State talent while educating future generations of concert-goers about music."

Nowlen says the academy this year has awarded about $30,000 in scholarships to music students and alumni at Sacramento State. It also seeks to expose underserved communities to the world of music, he says, by holding concerts for schoolchildren and providing violins and

Nature center committed to working through the tough times

By LANCE ARMSTRONG East Sacramento News Writer

vcnnews@valcomnews.com

Despite looming financial difficulties for the Effie Yeaw Nature Center and the apparent loss of staff and programs that are expected to occur due to budget cuts, which were outlined in the last edition of the East Sacramento News, the center's tradition of meeting its main objective to educate the people of the region about the importance of preserving nature continues.

And this is a tradition that has stood the test of time, as the center, which is a unit of the Sacramento County Department of Regional Parks, has continued to gain importance in the community and region since its opening in 1976.

Established as a place to showcase the natural environment of the Sacramento area, this award-winning environmental and cultural education center is a popular destination spot for people of all ages.

The center, which meets California curriculum standards for elementary school students and is visited by many groups of students throughout the year, includes wildlife exhibits, resident animals, a 77-acre nature preserve, native plant landscaping, a Nisenan Maidu summer village and a nature-themed Discovery Shop.

Although the center, which is located at 2850 San Lorenzo Way in Ancil Hoffman County Park in Carmichael, opened 33 years ago, its story begins much earlier.

The woman behind it all

During the 1950s and 1960s, local elementary school teacher Effie Yeaw laid the foundation for the then-future center through her natural and cultural history walks, which she led in an area, which was known as Deterding Woods, along the American River. These walks were located in the same area where the center would later be built. One of the creative teaching methods of Yeaw was to present tales of animals to children using human names and trivial facts about the animals. Among the animal character names were Polly the Opossum, Carlyle the Crow and Sammy the Snake.

Yeaw, who was born in Chico on May 15, 1900, understood the importance of appreciating and preserving this natural woodland area along the river for both the people of her era and future generations.

As an environmental educator and conservationist, Yeaw was also part of the drive to establish the American River Parkway, the Save the American River Association and a county tree preservation ordinance.

An educator throughout her life, Yeaw, who graduated from both Sacramento High School and Sacramento Junior College, passed away at the age of 69 on Jan. 3, 1970.

But her name, inspiration and leadership for protecting and educating people about Sacramento's natural environment lives on through the Effie Yeaw Nature Center, which was built on the edge of the former Deterding Woods and formally dedicated on June 19, 1976.

The construction of the center was made possible through a variety of actions, including the director of parks' 1960 reception of a Land and Water Conservation Fund grant to purchase the land that is now Ancil Hoffman County Park. This marked the beginning of a variety of parkland purchases in the area.

Five years later, a land use and development plan, which included a future natural and cultural resource interpretive center in Ancil Hoffman County Park, was approved by the Sacramento County Board of Supervisors.

A special place

Betty Cooper, interpretive specialist of the center, said that because of its age, the center is a very multigenerational place.

"Kids come here with their parents, who came here when they were kids," Cooper said. "We occasionally have people who come here and say they had Effie Yeaw as their teacher."

Despite the center's ensuing difficulties as a result of the upcoming budget cuts, Cooper said that the center is striving to maintain its existence as a place that Yeaw would be proud to see.

"We're not going to go off in a corner and cry," Cooper said. "We're going to continue to be active as much as we can. We don't expect any big safety net to fall out of the sky, so we're going to be working real hard to obtain fundraising and grants to support our programs."

Meanwhile, as the center's staff is preparing for tougher times ahead, it continues to plan for various center activities.

"We'll be maintaining our operations at a minimal level and we still have (this year's) summer camps, because we have already committed to them," Cooper said. "Because of the budget cuts, we'll be looking at some partial closures of the center and a serious reduction of services."

In addition to this year's summer camps, another of the center's summer activities will be the Night Owls program.

Using visual and sound aids, Denise Booth, the center's naturalist, will lead an up-close presentation of these birds of prey, which are residents of the center.

The presentation, which will be held on June 5 at 7 p.m., will be followed by a short hike in search of owls in the wild. Admission is free and light refreshments will be served.

For additional information regarding the Effie Yeaw Nature Center and its special programs and activities, call 489-4918 or visit the Web site www.effieyeaw.org.

A peek into the past East Portal Park: A remnant of early 'Little Italy'

By LANCE ARMSTRONG East Sacramento News Writer vcnnews@valcomnews.com

East Sacramento is rich with history and among its many historical features is East Portal Park – the neighborhood park, which has been a popular site for recreation and leisure for about the past 70 years.

Those who are familiar with the story of East Sacramento's Little Italy, the historic Italian neighborhood featured in the May 7 edition of The East Sacramento News, understand the strong connection between the park and those of Italian descent.

The 7-acre park is located within the vicinity of Little Italy, which was at its height from the 1920s to several years after World War II. This neighborhood is roughly located from 48th to 58th streets, between H Street and Folsom Boulevard.

From pit to park

Located at 1120 Rodeo Way and also bordered by 51st and M streets and Dover Avenue, East Portal Park is recognized for its unique bowl-shaped appearance.

Delina (DaPrato) Skarles, an Italian-American who grew up just minutes from the park on 48th Street, just north of Folsom Boulevard, explained the background of the park's sunken-in characteristic.

"When I was just a little girl, the park wasn't there," Skarles said. "There was nothing out in that area, just little plots of land with gardens and open land and where the park is today, the ground was being worked as a gravel pit. That's why the park has its bowl-shaped look."

Skarles, who said that the park dates back to about the early 1940s, added that one of her favorite early memories is when she used to fly kites at the then-new park, which she said "was just starting to get its green features."

John Sherratt, 60, who grew up on 45th Street, near B Street, and attended Kit Carson Junior High School at 1324 54th St., said that because of its unique shape, the park has had the misfortune of experiencing repeated flooding.

Sherratt added that he recalls that on one occasion, the water reached such a high level that people were maneuvering through the park in canoes and kayaks, as well as bringing out sandbags to block the potential flow of the water outside of the park.

East Sacramento resident Jeanette Pieruccini, who was raised directly across the street from the park on M Street with her brother, John, and her sister, Joan, by her father, William, and her mother, Alma, said that the park was once a popular site for ski clubs.

"Ski clubs would place fake snow on those slopes and practice skiing right there in the park," Jeanette said.

Jeanette also recalls attending potlucks at the park with about 10 other families during the holidays, playing hide-and-go-seek, basketball, baseball, football in the mud and crocket.

And when the park was once lined with bushes in many places, Jeanette said that she participated in one of her favorite childhood pranks, which she referred to as "the purse trick."

"There would be about 40 people and we would hide in the bushes and we'd put a purse attached to fishing line at the stop sign and when a person would stop to pick it up, we'd yank it away before they could grab it," Jeanette said. "We definitely had a lot of fun times at that park."

John Pieruccini, 67, who said that he climbed every tree in the park during his youth, said that had it not been for a petition that was signed by many people in his neighborhood, the history of East Portal Park may have ended a half-century ago. "A big unifying thing of the neighborhood in the late 1950s was the blocking of the plan to put Fairytale Town at East Portal Park," John said. "The neighbors petitioned against it and Fairytale Town ended up being built in William Land Park. Had Fairytale Town been built there (at the park), my parents would have sold out (of the neighborhood). It brought the people of the neighborhood together so much that certain people who would never talk to each other were talking and having potlucks together every other week."

Bocce booms

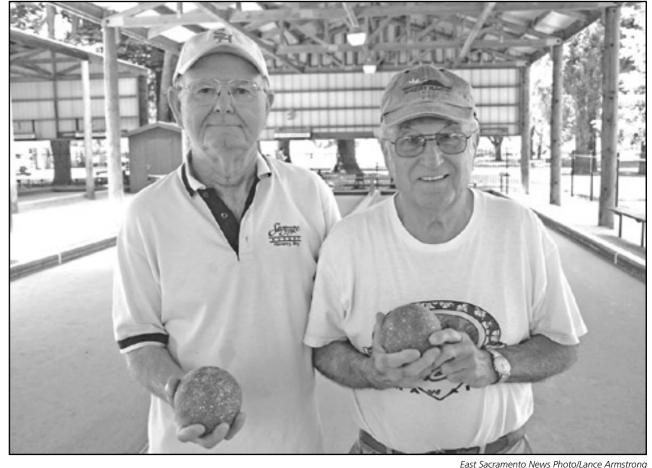

Certainly, when reviewing the history of East Portal Park, one word that cannot be ignored is the word, bocce.

The centerpiece of the park is undoubtedly the East Portal Bocce Club courts, where on just about any given day one can view games of bocce ball, a sport that is heavily-rooted in Italian culture.

This game is mostly played at the park during the afternoons and early evenings, although it is not uncommon to see club members practicing the sport during morning hours.

Bocce ball player Gene Geraty demonstrates his approach to the sport, which has been played at East Portal Park since the 1940s.

Although the Egyptians are credited with inventing the sport, which is so old that an ancient painting of a primitive version of the game was once found in an Egyptian tomb, bocce ball has its definite Italian connections.

Italians are recognized for creating the first bocce clubs in modern times and naturally, as Italian immigrants arrived in masses to America during the turn of the 20th century, they brought the game of bocce along with them.

And with the heavy influx of Italians in the earlier years of Sacramento, bocce, which is generally played in groups of two or four and is most closely related to bowling, made its way to the capital city.

Éast Portal Park was not the first place in Sacramento to have bocce courts, explained 81-year-old East Portal Bocce Club member Bill Bordisso.

"When I was a kid in the 1930s, there used to be bocce ball courts on R Street, between 8th and 9th streets," said Bordisso, who describes bocce as a good sport for all types of people.

Although bocce has been played at East Portal Park since the park's early years, it was not until the 1970s that the club was founded.

About a decade later, the club benefitted from a popular upgrade, as roof coverings were placed above the park's courts.

The club, which proudly displays its 2004 U.S. Bocce Federation national championship banner at the entrance to its bocce facility, continues to carry forth its longtime tradition, which includes its annual Fourth of July Tournament.

Although the majority of the club members are men of Italian descent, who average 60 years of age, it is not uncommon to see others who have picked up the game, including women and people of other cultures.

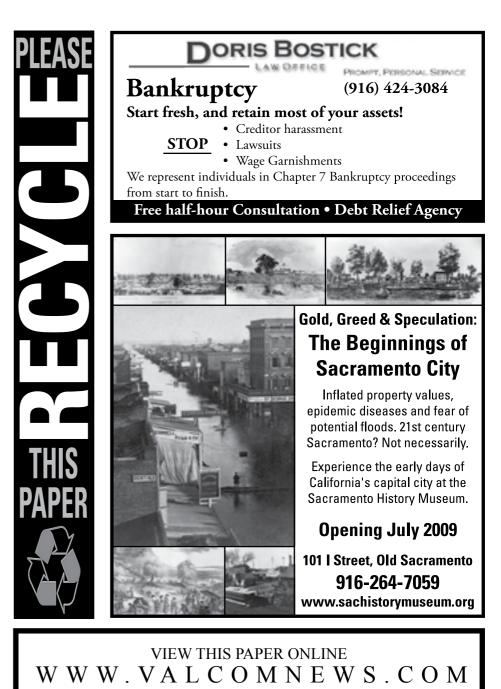

Regarding bocce, 79-year-old Gene Geraty, who points out that he is one of only two Irish-Americans in the club, said, "It's more fun than you've ever had in your life, once you get into it."

Portal to the past

Also drawing much attention is the park's annual Pops in the Park concert series, picnic areas and gated playground, which was built in about the late 1980s.

East Sacramento resident Shasha MacCurdy said that she enjoys the playground because it is "kid-friendly, shaded, fenced and easy to watch the kids."

While the heyday of early Little Italy has long since passed and few people remain who can relate firsthand stories of some of the formative years of this area, it can be comforting to know that as the years go by, East Portal Park seems destined to continue many longtime traditions of this important East Sacramento neighborhood.

Faces and Places Elks deliver awards to exceptional students, teachers

Adverfise in california kids!

California Kids! is an events and activities guide for active families. It is published once a month by Valley Community Newspapers, which also publishes the Arden-Carmichael News, East Sacramento News, Land Park News and Pocket News.

It is distributed throughout Sacramento and surrounding areas.

California Kids! reaches those parents most likely to purchase products and services by targeting active families who get out and enjoy all that the community has to offer.

We've had a wonderful response. What we're hearing from both our readers and advertising business is that we have filled a void in the market by reaching parents of kids between toddler and teenager.

Rates are very affordable.

School: Enrollment low at proposed Marian Anderson school site

the former Marian Anderson Elementary School facility at 2850 49th St. Looking for just 150 students for the first year, the district did an open enrollment.

"We only got 75 (students) and only half were confirmed to be registered by the deadline," said Tom Barentson, CFO and deputy superintendant of SCUSD. "Therefore, the board decided not to open a high school because of financial reasons."

Future plans

The district has since put a group together to study just how great a need there is for a new high school, and what type of school that should be.

"There are a lot of families with young children moving into the downtown area and they are concerned that there's no neighborhood high school," Barentson stated. "They want a conclusion about where their kids will go."

For now, Barentson is encouraged with the fact that students who live in the former attendance area of Sacramento High have other "excellent" high schools in the area to go to, such as Mc-Clatchy, Hiram Johnson and others.

"Sac City is a great district," he said. "It's just heart wrenching what's happening (with the budget), but we have far more schools than most, so they need to be pared down and we need to do this with a plan, so that's what we're doing."
