Janey Way Memories:

The Old Armory

By MARTY RELLES

Last Thursday, as I returned home from my weekly visit to Fancy Feet Dance Academy with granddaughter Gabrielle, I drove by the old National Guard Armory on Elvas Avenue and I Street. Something seemed different about the old facility, and then I noticed a mural on its northern wall depicting high school girls decked out in red and gray uniforms. I thought outloud that St. Francis High School must now occupy the old armory. Apparently, the Guard has left that building and turned it over to the school.

I remember when they built the armory in the early 1960s. It was quite a big deal on Janey Way because the main entrance to the facility was located at the north end of our neighborhood. Consequently, vehicles driven by Guard troops rolled regularly down Janey Way. Since this particular unit was a logistics battalion, that amounted to a lot of 5-ton trucks, jeeps and other military hardware.

The kids on our street thought this was great.

tary hardware right in our neighborhood? Our parents didn't like it at all. Soon, Dante Viani came walking up and down the street collecting signatures on a petition opposing the location of the main entrance to the armory.

When he had gathered sufficient signatures, Dante took the petition down to the mayor's office and requested that the Guard change the location of the entrance to the facility. His effort proved successful. The Guard unit built a new entrance where J Street meets Elvas Avenue and locked up the gate on Janey Way. Mission accomplished.

After that, the National Guard developed a good relationship with the people of Janey Way. remember they held an annual open house where the public came in to tour the facility.

It proved a great experience for all of us. We got talk to the guard members all decked out in full military regalia. We also were able to climb all over the military vehicles that lined the facility. I guess they were hoping to recruit us sometime later in life.

After touring the facility, we gathered at a table in the main building to eat cookies and drink punch. To a 12-year-old boy, that sounds like the perfect day.

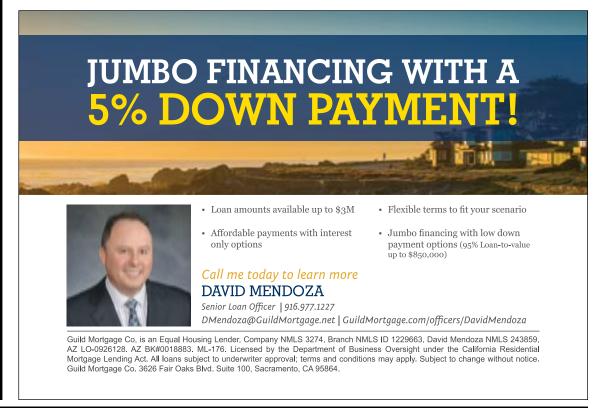

So, here I was last week, driving by the old armory and thinking how those soldiers served to protect us in the event of an emergencies like the fires we have recently experienced here in Northern California.. They did their job well. Now the old armory is What could be cooler than having all that mili- just another military Janey Way memory.

Lady of the Lake speaks about finding a dead body

By MONICA STARK

For what began as a typical morning on McKinley Pond, Monday, Oct. 5 for the Lady of the Lake turned out to be anything but that. As news reports indicated, neighbor Judy McClaver was cleaning out the pond when from a distance she saw something black floating. At first she thought it was a plastic bag, and then as she rowed closer to the floating object, she noticed black clothing. A bit worried at that point, she held her breath wondering if there was going to be fecal matter wrapped up inside, as that's been something she's come across in the past, but as police officials and news reports have stated she found a dead body.

As she comes rowing toward shore after I call out her name around 11:30 a.m., Judy responds, "Do you think this is enough to put up a fence?"

While she found the body around 9 a.m., Judy was found still on the island, cleaning the pond more than two hours later. "What am I going to any of this up as I don't have that kind do? Go home and cry? I've cried on enough shoulders today."

In the face of death, she didn't really want to look, but noticed the victim was wearing basketball clothing. "He was wearing pants, underwear, a top. I couldn't tell the skin color right away because of the murky green color of the pond." Pointing toward the southwest area of the pond, Judy noted, "It's the same place where that Range Rover drove into the pond (back in February 2014). You'd think that's the Bermuda Triangle over there. I told (the city parks and recreation department) this was going to happen weeks ago and here it happened. I just did not think I would be the one to find a body. I am thankful it was not a child! It's not pleasant. Kids fall in all the time."

She said she has witnessed numerous children fall into the pond either chasing toys or waterfowl or because parents were not close enough and they tripped on the uneven edge.

pond. Dogs go in chasing a ball. People use the pond water for water balloons and to wash their hands off. I have a picture of a couple drunk young pond. maybe 20-somethings with their surf boards. One mother with her child reported to me seeing a teen kill a duck throwing sticks at it. The number of people inebriated around the pond is unbelievable. Some are there drinking lar one at least with those on the citat family gatherings but the majority are there to sleep.

"People sleep on the benches, on edges of pond, and in the park and bushes. This at times is combined with oththose using drugs and breathing in gas from spray cans at night. Add those who think using the pond for a toilet in broad daylight in front of others is a badge of honor, or use it because they are too inebriated to know where they are. They get up from lying down and can easily fall into the pond. Then there are those pouring bottles of soda and alcohol into the pond. I am not making of an imagination."

Judy pushed the city to test the pond water considering the number of waterfowl and turtles, people using it as a toilet, dog feces tossed in, trash, strollers, bikes, tires, and drug paraphernalia found in the pond. This testing was done in May 2013 and the pond was deemed a "Human Health Hazard" for fecal bacteria, including Salmonella, a test backed up by testing at California State University, Sacramento. "The city agreed to put up signs, but the signs are small and easily missed. They also say the water in the pond is non potable. Lots of people tell me to city council for approval before the they do not know what non potable means," she said.

Through Judy's dedication keeping the pond as clean as she can, removing abandoned pet ducks from the pond, removing bamboo from the island so as to prevent the strangulation of animals that reside there, she has also found inebriated people wandering visory Committee for the pond's ren- Oct. 19 at 6 p.m.

For more than three years, she's been on a mission to get the city to help her clean out the pond and put a fence around along the whole walkway, but her goal hasn't been a popuizen advisory committee, which was formed to assist city staff to address water quality and aesthetics of the McKinley Pond and the three William Land Park ponds. "The idea of er mental issues too. Then there are constructing a fence around the entire McKinley Park pond was proposed by two members out of a concern to primarily prevent people from feeding the wildlife and tossing trash into the pond. The fence around a decorative pond was overwhelmingly rejected by the committee," Maria C. 'Marycon" Razo, media and communications specialist for the Office of the City Manager, told the East Sacramento News.

Razo said the city hired a consultant to develop long term pond improvements and maintenance procedures that will "ensure water quality enhancement for the wildlife and pond aesthetics. The committee reviewed the consultant's recommendations and voted unanimously on a set of solutions to forward to city council." She said, for McKinley Park, the improvements related to safety included the construction of a decorative fence between the McKinley Park playground entrance and the pond. The committee's recommendations will be brought end of the year. The improvements will be implemented early next year, she said. The committee is made up of two citizens from Council District 3 (McKinley Pond), two citizens from Council District 4 (Land Park Ponds), and three city parks staff. Judy currently sits on the Pond Ad-

> "Do we need a fence around the pond for public protection? I say 'yes.' This is supported by many visitors to the pond that have seen many of the same things I have. The playground that attracts many is right next to the pond. Kids come to the pond from all directions. This pond is a public safety issue. Pond renovation will not make the water clean for very long. The waterfowl and people will continue to do what they already do. Renovation does not change behaviors. It will take the muck (about 2 feet of it) out of the pond. A fence can be done so that it is aesthetically appealing. "There are lots of pictures of this pond over the decades back to 1913 showing fences around this pond serving a safety purpose without appearing as barriers. Planting tall plants between the fence and pond would decrease trash and leaves from blowing in and add filtration of the runoff water from the park and the street. This would help keep the water in the pond cleaner. The plants could also add color (flowers) that attract hummingbirds and photographers. Low water use plants exist. There is aeration proposed that would come from the bottom of the pond as opposed to the fountains. This is a good idea as it adds oxygenation to the bottom of the pond to help the bacteria with breaking up the debris (leaves etc). It also helps with the ecosystem of a body of water that has no flowing water and provides oxygen to fish."

Judy said she has received more than 270 thank yous and "only one or two is against the fence." East Sacramento Preservation, which she is a member of, is working on a Go Fund Me account to raise money for the fence.

There will be a meeting on the matter with Councilmember Jeff Harris at the Clunie Clubhouse on Monday,

Broad Green Pictures brings us "99 Homes", the latest offering from director Ramin Bahrani. A very real horror story of big banks and a Florida middleman realtor that seizes homes from defaulting homeowners to evict them. The movie begins with no apology by showing an unexpected and unpleasant moment, setting the tone for the unease that will prevail for the movie's entire running time. The scene is an eviction of a home. The next home in the path of bank repossession offers a tense moment for the Nash family: Dennis, a hardworking construction worker, played by Andrew Garfield, is trying his best

What would you like to see happen with the old Marshall School?

By ELLEN COCHRANE

Maybe you're old enough to remember the porcelain water fountains and wooden banister staircases; maybe you're just charmed by the past. But when you pass inside the wooden double doors of Old Marshall School on 27th and G Streets you enter days gone by. Beware though, classroom chalkboard scribblings warn of ghosts and you'll have to pick your way through forgotten furniture and abandoned remodel efforts.

If the building could speak it would tell you that there are not many renovation opportunities left in Midtown like Marshall School. Find the deal, the money and the time to bring me back. I am ready to serve.

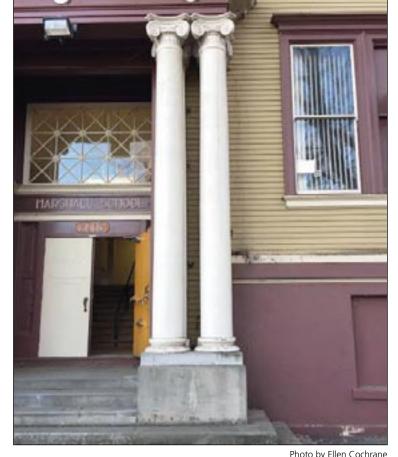

The school was built in 1903 and has 16 classrooms. There is an additional annex building that was built by the Boy Scouts a couple of decades ago. Old Marshall sits on 1.18 acres and is surrounded by a large parking lot. In its past lives the school has been a public school, center for the California Montessori Project, The MET and an Adult Education/Child Development Program. It's been vacant now for many years.

The school site is still owned by Sacramento City Schools and School Board Trustees Ellen Cochrane and Jay Hansen, and district staff, see the promise in this building and they see the challenges. They would like to know what you think about Old Marshall School's future. Please submit any reuse ideas, or tell us about a successful repurposing of a similar building. It's highly unlikely that the building will reopen as a public school, but all else is being considered.

You can submit ideas for the Old Marshall off the website, http://www.scusd. edu/oldmarshall>.

SCUSD is not in the real estate business, so the firm Overland Pacific and Cutler (real estate re-use expert) was hired to help the district find the best solutions for Old Marshall and other surplus properties that have no further use as school sites. Meet your local embalmer: Cody Barrett

By MONICA STARK

There used to be a time when those who worked at East Lawn's mortuaries acted as both embalmers and funeral directors, but times have changed and more recently the business has switched to centralized embalming out of the Greenback Lane location. Serving three East Lawn mortuaries, two local embalmers manage to do all the embalming for the company. Valley Community Newspapers spoke with one of them, embalmer Cody Barrett, and about his work experience and his caring for bodies as a purpose in life that he feels so strongly about.

"I know that to someone who doesn't do it, it might seem odd or overwhelming or even unimaginable," he says about his work as an embalmer. "To me, it's not that way at all. To me, I love what I do. I feel like I am giving back to my community. It's where I fit. I am an embalmer. It's not just what I do, it's who I am."

That self identification wasn't realized until he actually started getting to know his coworkers at East Lawn and a humanizing thing happened, fulfilling his curiosity about those and we always resemble Riff Raff from the 'Rocky Horror Picture Show', but it's not that way at all," he said. "I found we are people just industry that's a little mysterious because we live in a death-denying society."

Asked by friends and family the same questions - Have you seen any ghosts? And, do the bodies ever sit up? - Cody is sorry to say "no" on both accounts. "I guess my day-to-day is so nor-

The moments that are most unforgettable, to Cody, are those that show his expertise in embalming. "When a family is concerned about seeing an open casket and then once a family member sees the body and says it looks who work in a funeral home." People always so good that they definitely want to see open think we walk around in this dark building casket"—those are the times, he said, that are the most memorable.

Our culture's veiled taboo around death and also the fact that most people haven't had to like anyone else. We just happen to work in an arrange a funeral, surely is going to evoke a certain emotion when visiting a funeral home, but to Cody and others in the field, they try to make that experience as positive as possible.

To ensure that high level expectation, Cody said professionalism, being an ethical person

They gave away medicine, clothing, food and threw big parties for needy youngsters and their families. They staged major events, bringing celebrities to town to raise major money to fund their unceasing efforts.

So, with a sincere appreciation for their deeds past, a revitalized group of Sacramento citizens has formed to continue the legacy of the "4 Robinhoods." In fact, they have already completed an urgently needed community project and more away.

and most importantly being empathetic are required characteristics for an embalmer, "If you don't, you probably won't be very good in this industry and if you're not (good), you won't last. You have to put yourself into this breathing person's shoes and understand what they must be going through and help them through the process. It's not a self-serve place. We have to guide them through that process."

Cody grew up in Nevada City and after he graduated Nevada Union High School in 1997, he moved to Kauai where he obtained his associates of arts degree from a community college. "I wasn't entirely focused at that time. I was 18. I got an AA in liberal arts. It was broad spectrum. Then, I moved back here in 2000-2001. That's when I started as a carpenter."

While at Nevada Union High School, Cody decided to apply to a mortuary just due to his curiosity, but without accomplishment. "I was curious about who or what kind of people worked there, but I didn't get the job, then I kind of forgot about it."

So, he was a carpenter for a bit until his daughter was born, and then was a stay-at-home dad, while his wife worked to support the family. But, when it came time for his little girl to go to preschool, he realized he needed to get back to work. It was then his interest in the mortuary industry came back around, even though he did not realize at the time necessarily how fortunate he was to land a steady position. "I applied here at East Lawn and got the job." He started with "transfers" and cleaning the funeral home. "I just worked my way up and went to mortuary college (at American River College) and finished that. I got my national and state license in embalming and have enjoyed it ever since." Curious thing about his classmates at ARC was that unfortunately for many of them they weren't able to land jobs as easily as Cody. "Not too many got jobs unless they had a job before they started (the mortuary program). It can be difficult to find work in Sacramento because of the mortuary school. I was pretty fortunate to randomly toddle into a mortuary just because I was curious. I didn't realize what a competitive industry it is (in Sacramento)," he said.

While the competitive nature of the industry may seem ironic, the truth is there are only two mortuary schools in all of California, the one at ARC and one in Cypress, which is located near Anaheim.

When he first told his family of his plans to go into the mortuary business, he said his parents thought it was an elaborate joke, but after they saw how passionate he was about this kind of work, their minds changed. "Now they think it's great and they understand my point of view of doing this work and where I fit in serving this community."

While he has spent most of his career thus far at East Lawn, for fewer than two years between 2013 and 2014, Cody had the opportunity to work for the body donation program round vegetable garden.

Locally famous mansion was home to successful laundry owner, photographer, others By LANCE ARMSTRONG Based on that research and other research regarding Dailey & Rogerson,

Many historic homes can be found in Sacramento, and one of the grandest of these homes is a palatial, 11room structure at the northeast corner of 21st and T streets.

It certainly is not easy to miss seeing this well-preserved Queen Anne shingle-style, brick and wood Victorian residence, as it towers above this section of the historic Poverty Ridge/ Sutter Terrace area.

But this four-level building's height, which is accentuated by its setting on elevated property, is only one element that draws the attention of those traveling by this structure.

The mansion's distinctive turret. oval windows, stained glass windows, balconies, columns and semicircular porch are also among the home's attractive exterior features.

Additionally, tall palms and a rich, green lawn add to the allure of the

Inside the house, one can view hardwood floors, hand-painted ceiling designs, detailed architectural moldings, historic carpets and wallpaper, three fireplaces, chandeliers, marble wash basins, ornate corner posts on a decorative staircase, a small musicians' loft and many other features.

This grand house, which was recently placed on the market for the first time since 2007, when it failed to sell for $1.8 million, has been a part of this community for well more than a century.

Research for this article resulted in the discovery of a reference to the construction of the building.

That reference, which was found in the Sept. 7, 1899 edition of The Sacramento Union, reads: "A new dwelling: Fred Mason has commenced the erection of a fine dwelling-house on Sutter Terrace, corner Twenty-first and T streets."

A 1907 advertisement for the local general contractors and builders, Dailey & Rogerson, includes a photograph of the 21st Street mansion, with a caption, which reads: "Mason home, built by us."

Prior to 1907, the existence of Dailey & Rogerson, which was located at 1822 M St. (now Capitol Avenue), had not been recognized in a city directory. The owners of that firm were William H. Dailey and Robert Rogerson.

Although Dailey had worked as a local carpenter for at least 11 years by 1906, that year's directory is the first such directory to recognize Rogerson as a resident and carpenter in Sacramento.

it seems likely that the 1907 advertisement refers to the roots of the company before Rogerson became Dailey's business partner.

At the time when Fred made arrangements to have his 21st Street home built, he was an established local businessman.

As early as 1878, Fred, a German immigrant who was then residing at 118 3rd St., was operating a custom shirt-making business.

By 1882, Fred was running the business - then known as the Sacramento Shirt Factory - at 528 J St. His residence at that time was located at 721 N St.

About two years later, Fred, married Caroline Nichols, who was born in Moline, Illinois to German immigrant parents in 1858.

As early as 1887, Fred was operating Mason's Steam Laundry at 528 J St.

By the following year, Fred was living at 1801 J St. and operating his laundry, shirt manufacturing and a men's furnishing goods business at 12th and D streets.

Among the employees of Mason's Steam Laundry at various times were Conrad Mason and Lillie Marvin.

The laundry business was located at its final site of 2030 O St. by 1897. It was also during the 1890s when Fred was running a towel service. Fred and Caroline were recognized in the 1900 U.S. Census – documented in June 1900 - as then residing at 1715 N St.

During research for this article, the earliest discovered reference to the Masons living in their 21st Street residence was found in the 1900 city directory.

Unfortunately for Fred, he was unable to enjoy that home for long, as he died on Dec. 17, 1901, after having surgery for stomach cancer.

The 1903 city directory recognizes Caroline as a resident of the same house at 1931 21st St.

That directory also lists her as the proprietor of Mason's Steam Laundry at 2030 O St. and a co-owner (with her brother-in-law, Henry E. Dorman) of Mason's Haberdashery at 622 K St. She would not retire until 1938.

Caroline, who was an equestrienne, a cocker spaniel breeder, the owner of one of the city's first electric cars and an active member of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, died in her 21st Street home on Saturday night, Nov. 7, 1942. She was 84.

Following Caroline's death, an appraisal of her estate's real and personal property was valued at $16,118.74.

The 1943 city directory recognizes Nebraska native Seymour S. White (1875-1956) and his wife, Nellie L. White (1877-1954), as then residing plumbing and wiring.

The house was also repainted and in the 21st Street home.

By 1945, the Whites had moved to 2414 27th St., and Edwin P. Fraser, who was employed as a poster hanger by the Foster and Kleiser Co. at 1330 St., and his wife, Murle H. Fraser, were living in the 21st Street mansion.

The Frasers were mentioned in the Aug. 5, 1946 edition of The Bee in its "divorce actions" section under the heading, "interlecutory (sic) decrees," as follows: "Murle H. from Edwin P. Fraser, cruelty."

In the 1947 city directory, the 21st sale at a cost of $1.8 million. Street mansion is listed as "vacant."

About a year later, Pembroke S. at 1506 Broadway, and his wife, Ag-Mason house.

Pembroke died at the age of 80 on May 7, 1963, and his widow, who was a local real estate broker, lived ing offered for a bit under $1 million, alone in her 21st Street home for sev- at $999,000. And the neighboring eral more years.

William A. "Bill" Smith (1921-2008), who came to Sacramento with his wife, Alice, in 1942, and founded the locally renowned Bill Smith Phomansion in about 1969.

During the 1970s, Bill and Alice began having their 21st Street mansion renovated.

The first phase of that restoration involved giving the structure a new foundation, steel beam supports, new

A building inspector's card, dated April 9, 1974, notes that the house was reroofed by Superior Roofing, of 7500 San Joaquin St., near Hiram W. Johnson High School, at a cost of $2,500.

Altogether, the Smiths spent 14 years having their home restored and refurnished.

Alice died in 2007, a year prior to the death of Bill, and the mansion, as previously mentioned, was placed for

The house, as also noted earlier in this article, was never sold, and the Smith Dyer, a realtor who then had his office family continues to own the structure.

And once again, the Smith family nes K. Dyer, moved into the former has opted to attempt to sell this classic Victorian mansion, which sits on a 9,147-square-foot lot.

> This time around, the house is bestructure and property at 1921-1923 21st St. is also for sale.

As one of the all-time most photographed residential buildings in the history of the city, the old Mason/Smith tography, moved into the 21st Street mansion continues to stand as one of the city's grandest classic homes.
