Public-private partnership to install solar panels at four sites to power Sacramento

Special to Pocket News

Following Sacramento City Council approval last week, SolarCity and the City of Sacramento are moving forward to install 1.9 megawatts – more than 8,000 solar panels – of new solar power capacity across four municipal sites later this year. The project is expected to be the largest solar power project undertaken by the City of Sacramento. Once operational, the panels are expected to produce approximately 2.6 million kilowatt-hours of solar electricity in their first year, enough to power approximately 250 homes. SolarCity will finance, install and maintain the solar installations.

“This project is a triple win for Sacramento – it will save taxpayers money by lowering the City’s energy costs, reduce pollution by generating renewable power, and create more local jobs to install the panels,” said Mayor Kevin Johnson. “It’s our goal to become a greener city and generating clean energy on our facilities is keeping with that commitment.”

The sites identified as part of this project include:

- City Hall in downtown Sacramento;
- The building at 300 Richards Boulevard that houses the police department and building and planning offices;
- Corporation yard on Meadowview Road that houses the City’s sanitation fleet and other services;
- South Area Corporation Yard off Fruitridge and 28th Street.

As part of the agreement, the City of Sacramento will pay for the power produced through a power purchase agreement (PPA) at a rate that is anticipated to be lower than what they pay for grid electricity, which is expected to create savings for taxpayers over the systems’ lifetimes.

“The City’s new solar projects should help us pass the 100-employee mark in Sacramento this year,” said Dennis Cox, regional director for SolarCity. “It’s possible for Sacramento businesses and residents to save money by using cleaner power, just as the City is doing, and we expect solar adoption to continue to increase in the area as a result of the City’s leadership.”

SolarCity has undertaken more than 700 solar projects in the Sacramento area, ranging from major manufacturing facilities and retail outlets, to hundreds of homes. The company recently expanded into a new, 15,000 square-foot operations center in Sacramento to house its 81 local employees, more than doubling its local facility space.

Effie Yeaw Nature Center to celebrate 35th anniversary

By LANCE ARMSTRONG
Pocket News writer
lance@valcomnews.com

The Effie Yeaw Nature Center in Carmichael's Ancil Hoffman Park is approaching a very special anniversary, as the center will turn 35 years old on June 19.

But the road to reaching this notable anniversary has not always been easy for the center, which is dedicated to its mission of "bringing awareness of the beauty and diversity of the natural world to children, families and the community through education initiatives that foster appreciation, enjoyment and stewardship of the unique natural and cultural resources of the Sacramento region."

The most difficult of these times occurred last July, when this award-winning environmental and cultural education center, which is part of a 77-acre nature preserve, was informed that it would be losing its county funding, because the county could no longer afford to operate the center.

But fortunately for the center, it has survived through the assistance of a non-profit organization, the American River Natural History Association, which obtained a temporary lease of the building from the county and presently operates the center.

Considering the challenges that the center faced last year, which included having its entire staff laid off, Betty Cooper, the center's development director, said that it is especially gratifying for the center to celebrate its 35th anniversary.

"In spite of the ups and downs and the incredible odds that we were facing last year, here we are like a phoenix, kind of rising from the flames of the budget devastation as an independent, non-profit and we're really proud of that," Cooper said. "We're going to be here to stay. It's a very important asset to the community to have our nature center here and we're going to make sure that it keeps going in perpetuity."

Through the recent work of the aforementioned association, which began providing assistance to the center in a lesser but nonetheless very essential role in 1981, the center has achieved much success during its transition.

Cooper said that the progress that has been made at the center has been accomplished with the labor of a dedicated "skeleton crew" of eight staff members, who have worked for lower wages and no benefits. In contrast, at its greatest strength, the center maintained a staff of 20 workers.

She added that the current staff is working to overcome one of its biggest obstacles.

"We're fighting a bit of a public relations problem," Cooper said. "A lot of people think that the nature center has been closed, so the teachers haven't been booking their programs as much as they have in the past. So, we're working on that. We're doing big outreaches to the schools. We're going to be offering some two-for-one-type programs to get the word out that we are open and thriving and we're working really hard to keep the nature center and its wonderful mission going for the community."

In recognizing the center's 35-year-history, it is important to focus in on the name of the center itself.

The name Effie Yeaw has a strong legacy in the Sacramento region, whether one thinks of the popular nature center which bears this name or whether one thinks of the late educator and naturalist Effie Yeaw, who was thought so highly of that her name was memorialized as part of the name of the nature center.

Born Effie Mae Cummings in Chico on May 15, 1900, Yeaw, who was the daughter of schoolteachers Galen and Ella Cummings, later moved to Wheatland, then to Lincoln and eventually to Sacramento, where she attended Sacramento High School – where she served as president of the Biological Honor Society – and Sacramento Junior College (today's Sacramento City College).

After receiving a bachelor's degree in social studies from the University of California, Berkeley in 1922, Yeaw taught at Harkness Grammar School and Sutter Junior High School in Sacramento before moving to Hawaii, where she continued to teach, while earning her master's degree in social studies from the University of Hawaii in 1932.

Yeaw later returned to the Sacramento area and resumed her teaching, this time as an elementary school teacher in the Carmichael School Dis-

Progress made in regional arts education plan in Sacramento schools

Special to Pocket News

Mayor Kevin Johnson held his weekly press conference on March 29 to celebrate the accomplishments of 'Any Given Child,' a program created by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts to provide arts education and arts experiences for schools.

Designed for students in grades K-8, Sacramento was chosen as the inaugural partner city for 'Any Given Child' in Oct. 2009. Planning of the program has been completed and implementation is currently in progress.

The program is housed under Mayor Johnson's 'For Arts' Sake' initiative and uses resources from Sacramento's school system, along with those of local artists, local arts organizations, and the Kennedy Center to create a long-range plan for arts education specific to the Sacramento community.

Sacramento Unified and Twin Rivers Unified School Districts were the first school districts chosen to launch this program.

"Any Given Child" has provided Sacramento with a tremendous opportunity to expand student access to the arts and strengthen arts education across our community. This year's progress has proved to be a success and we look forward to a continued partnership with the Kennedy Center to help provide arts education to students for years to come," Johnson said.

Kennedy Center Director of National Partnerships, Barbara Shepherd, was on hand to discuss national expansion of the 'Any Given Child' program, which seeks to bring access, balance, and equity to each child's arts education, using an affordable model that combines the resources of the school district, local arts groups and the Kennedy Center.

With the assistance of expert consultation services provided by Kennedy Center staff and other professionals, community leaders are developing a long-range plan for arts education that is tailored for the Sacramento school district and community, and allows for local expansion of the program.

"Sacramento has been a model launch city for this initiative," said Darrell M. Ayers, vice president of Education at the Kennedy Center. "Working with Sacramento's Any Given Child Governing Council has helped us further shape this program. It's been wonderful to see the unyielding support for the arts and for arts education in the Sacramento region, both through the Mayor's commitment and through local arts organizations and individuals. We have now expanded the program to Springfield, Missouri; Portland, Oregon and Las Vegas, Nevada with additional cities to come."

By partnering with local arts organizations and using existing resources, the program aims to create little administrative overhead, remaining affordable. The first phase of the program, a comprehensive audit of existing arts education resources and needs assessment by Kennedy Center staff and consultants, began in October of 2009 in Sacramento.

A review of the community and the school system revealed that 93% of area teachers believe integrating more arts into education will help them meet some of their classroom challenges. 71 percent of schools surveyed through 'Any Given Child' do not provide arts education programs. Based on this information, a plan was created that built arts education back into the school day, through providing professional development for teachers and connecting community arts educators with classrooms and schools.

A total of 36 classrooms are working with seven residency artists from the Sacramento community.

Students in these classes are receiving hands-on arts education experiences in many different arts genres. Classroom teachers have been able to take advantage of supplemental lessons with online interactive learning modules and videos developed by the Kennedy Center such as those available on www.artsedge.org. The goal is to provide a tapestry of arts education, weaving together existing arts classes with available outside resources.

By the end of the school year, arts experiences in the form of in-school arts assemblies will have reached 39,463 students in a total of 129 assemblies throughout the two school districts.

The program will be expanding in the next school year to provide an even deeper arts education experience for Sacramento's K-8 students.

Reichmuth Park, which was the site of Munger's Lake, is shown in its flooded state in this photograph that was taken last week.

Historic Riverside-Pocket area lake refuses to die

By LANCE ARMSTRONG

As a result of recent heavy rains, a large body of standing water accumulated in the north end of Reichmuth Park, near 43rd Avenue. But unlike many flooded areas in the city, this body of water reverts back to early Sacramento area history.

Long before the days of the Gold Rush, a lake was located at this site, which was home to the Miwok Indians.

And the water of the lake continued to exist on a regular basis until the lake bed was partially filled in at the time of the creation of the 22-acre park, which has the address of 6135 Gloria Drive. This process occurred during the dry season when the lake's level was low.

Since the lake was not filled in to the point that the ground was leveled off to provide adequate drainage, during prolonged, heavy rains, water accumulates, resulting in the partial rebirth of the site's historic lake.

Evidence of a former Indian campground around the lake was discovered by Portuguese settlers, who farmed in the Riverside-Pocket area.

Among the items discovered after the farmers tilled the ground were: arrowheads, grinding rocks and various tools.

Furthermore, several Indian burial grounds existed in the area, including one that was located within a quarter mile from the lake. This burial ground was discovered during the construction of Interstate 5, near the end of the Seamas Avenue exit.

Another burial ground is located on Pocket Road, a short distance from Garcia Bend Park, and is presently protected from development.

The lake, which was originally a rainfall lake that was surrounded by a wilderness of tall trees and brush, bears the name of the Munger family, who arrived in the Sacramento area during Gold Rush times.

According to the 1890 book, "An Illustrated History of Sacramento County," Carl Munger, whose father, Calvin, was a native of New York and whose mother was born in Massachusetts, resided on property near Oak Hall, a speakeasy, where businessmen from downtown Sacramento would venture to spend leisure evenings.

Carl operated Oak Hall, which served beer, fine wines, lemonade, cold lunches and chicken dinners and also sold cigars, from about 1880 to 1897.

Also located in the vicinity of Oak Hall was Munger's Lake.

Pocket historian Dolores (Silva) Greenslate speculates that the house where both she and her mother, Maria Gloria "Mamie" (Machado) Silva, were born was also the former residence of the Munger family.

She has come to this conclusion based on the fact that her childhood home, which was located on the present day Riverside Boulevard, was located near Munger's Lake and was present during the beginning of the settlement of the Portuguese farms in the early 1850s.

Considering that Calvin was born in 1822 and the aforementioned 1890 history book refers to him dying "in the residence of his son Carl, four miles from Sacramento on the river road" in 1872, it is uncertain if any member of the Munger family would have resided in the home as early as the early 1850s.

One of the features of Munger's Lake is that it attracted waterfowl such as ducks, geese and mud hens and contained small turtles and fish, as is evident by a story, which appeared in the Dec. 3, 1856 edition of The Sacramento Union.

Shown in this 1923 photograph, Maria Gloria "Mamie" (Machado) Silva and her husband, Victor Dias Silva, stand next to the house that is speculated to have previously been the home of Carl Munger.

To the right of this 1927 photograph is a large, horse barn, and barely shown to the left of this image is a stairway leading to the Machado home that may previously have been the home of Carl Munger.

According to The Union, Carl was fined $10 for selling fish that he had caught in Munger's Lake without a license.

Unaware of the city ordinance that required him to have a license to sell the fish in Sacramento, Carl brought a wagon load of fish to the city and sold the entire lot to one man.

Around the turn of the 20th century, the property on the east side of the lake was owned by the Reichmuth family, thus leading to the name of the park. The family had a dairy and sold their milk in town and also to others who visited the dairy with their own bottles to be filled.

Visitors accessed the dairy via a gravel road off Freeport Boulevard, across from today's Sacramento Executive Airport.

In 1900, John Joseph Machado and Joseph Azevedo, Sr., who were both born on the island of Pico in the Azores Islands of Portugal, immigrated to America and eventually settled in the Pocket area to make their homes.

John and Joseph married into the Anton Rodrigues Pereira (later Perry) pioneering family, as John married Clara Perry and Joseph married Fatima "Minnie" Filomina Perry.

Being close friends from their childhood, Joseph and John decidated to pool their money and purchase about a 53-acre ranch, which included part of Munger's Lake and the old, existing two-level house, which was possibly the former house of Carl Munger.

This house became the home of John and Clara, who raised four children in the house.

Joseph and Minnie had their home constructed a short distance south of John and Clara's house, and together they raised two children in the house.

This partnership of the property continued until 1917, when

School Districts stay hopeful as senate passes $14 billion in budget cuts

By ELIZABETH VALENTE
Pocket News writer
elizabeth@valcomnews.com

It was into the late hours of evening on March 17 when the State Senate passed 16 budget bills resulting in approximately $14 billion in cuts and other solutions toward resolving the 2010-11 and 2011-12 General Fund Budget deficit.

"We were very methodical. We did what we set out to do, to put a significant dent in the budget deficit," said Senate President pro Tempore Darrell Steinberg. "We know we have a lot more work to do."

Without the tax extensions, the Legislature will be forced to consider an all-cuts budget, which, according to the Legislative Analyst, likely would include an extra five billion dollars in cuts to K-12 schools around the state. All this has come after the March 15 date when school districts across the state were forced to send out layoff notices.

SCUSD

The Sacramento City Unified School District (SCUSD) sent a total of 405 layoff notices to certificated staff the week of March 15. As Supt. Raymond explained, the last thing he wants to do is layoff the district's dedicated teachers and counselors.

"We do not have surplus staff at SCUSD, no one is expendable," said Raymond. "Our teachers, our office managers, our custodians, our aides - we need everyone."

The Board of Education made the decision to increase class sizes and reduce counselors, decreasing the certificated staffing needs by 355.6 full-time equivalent positions, Raymond added. The number of layoff notices is higher because some of the district's newer employees work part-time hours.

March 15 was the deadline to submit a balanced budget to the Sacramento County Office of Education (SCOE) that addresses what will happen if voters fail to extend current temporary taxes in a June special election. SCOE accepted the layoff notices as evidence that the district is seriously planning for the worst, even though class size increases and salary reductions must be negotiated with the districts' collective bargaining partners.

Raymond said he is hopeful and optimistic about the upcoming changes and making it through this challenging budget season.

"Last year, the district collaborated with our labor partners to balance a $32.5 million deficit through a combination of employee contributions and other budget moves," he said. "Of the 739 certificated layoff notices sent last year, all but 20 were eventually rescinded. And despite the budget shortfall, the district saved librarians and counselors and expanded art and music programs."

SJUSD

The San Juan Unified School District Board of Education sent notices to more than 550 employees in their district, primarily library staff and school nurses in the latest effort to close a $36.7 million budget gap.

"We are keeping our librarians in the high school level, it's the media technicians in the elementary schools that have received notices," explained Trent Allen, director of communication and spokesperson for SJUSD. "The media tech position of the library is being eliminated, but the functions of the library in the elementary schools are staying open. Kids can still go in and check out books."

Allen said that it is a teacher's hire date - which is generally the first day of school of the year they begin teaching - that plays a big role when it comes to who receives a notices. The last-hired teachers are the first to receive layoff notices, except in positions the district chooses to protect.

"It's by seniority, whoever has been in that job function the longest has the right to the job. For our certificated staff, which is our principal, teachers, counselors, and nurses, (for) those folks it's by credential area and then seniority," said Allen. "It also depends if we have a credential that we need a teacher for and then folks with the more senior within that credential are the folks who have a right to that job."

Some board members are hopeful the economic situation will improve and the layoffs will be rescinded. The school district will have to cut $13.9 million to $35 million if legislatures decide to do an all cuts budget. That means SJUSD will have to do a 50-percent to 100-percent cut greater than what they just did.

"We spend 90 percent of our money in serving students. When you look at the breakdown of positions we employ the vast amount is teachers," said Allen. "As these reductions hit every area of the district including administration, teachers, custodial, I would envision any other reduction would continue to hit all levels of the district."

Despite the cuts Allen agrees with Raymond in saying that for the most part, the community has been supportive.

"Folks have been incredibly understanding; they know the budget has been what it is and they know we are trying to live within our means," said Allen. "At the moment we've been spared from having to cut furloughs, mass layoffs, eliminated sports, athletics, and arts. (In) a lot of ways we've been able to weather this relatively well, but still the cuts are very dramatic and very real."

Nota bene

Sacramento is not the only City in the pink. School districts across the state have sent out nearly 20,000 layoff notices to teachers and other school employees due to the uncertainty over the state budget, according to the California Teachers Association (CTA). This comes as Gov. Jerry Brown and state lawmakers negotiate over how to close the state's nearly $27 billion budget shortfall.

Many districts have not reported how many pink slips they have issued as they prepare for worst-case budget scenarios, according to CTA President David Sanchez. He expects the number to surpass 20,000. Two years ago, districts handed out layoff notices to a record 26,500 teachers, but only 60 percent of them ended up losing their jobs.

"The numbers speak loudly about this crisis," Sanchez said. "Pink slips are causing chaos for teachers and parents who worry about their children's education and future."

Brown is urging legislators to create a special election in June, asking voters to extend increases in the sales tax, vehicle license fee and income tax that are due to expire June 30. He will need to get a two-thirds vote from the Legislature for the special election. If there is no special election, K-12 and community colleges' share of the budget will be cut by at least $2.2 billion.

If there is a special election and the ballot measure fails, SCUSD is looking to cut $22.3 million and SJUSD an additional $13.6 to $35 million for the 2011-2012 school year.

Upon the departure of Joseph and his family, John and his family moved into Joseph's former home.

At a later time, when John's sons were old enough to help him with heavy labor, John and his sons cleared away the heavy wooded and bushy area on his portion of land along Munger's Lake in order to begin farming pink beans to be sold at market and a variety of squash and melons that were grown on the sandy banks of the lake.

During especially rainy years, the lake would overflow its bank and water would spread over the fields.

These times were very devastating for John and his family, since this flooding caused them to lose their entire income for the year.

The old John Machado house and the newer Joseph Azevedo house existed on the property until the local construction of Interstate 5 necessitated the removal of these homes.

Greenslate, who was raised in the house that was possibly Carl Munger's former house, said that she is very nostalgic when it comes to remembering Munger's Lake.

"I remember running back through the fields with neighborhood children to play on the banks of the lake," Greenslate said. "It was fun looking for arrowheads that we often found when the soil was disked for new plantings. I also remember fondly watching my adored grandfather (John Machado) while he worked on the thresher as he sacked the beans, which were grown in the lake. Presently, I enjoy driving by (Reichmuth) Park and looking at it and visualizing the old lake and how it used to be. And when I see the water build in the park after heavy storms, I get a kick out of it and I say, 'Good for you, you still want to be a lake.'" trict, which was later a part of the San Juan Unified School District.

Yeaw worked to instill a love for nature in her students through the Carmichael Conservation Center, which included birds, squirrels, raccoons and a fawn.

Although the center closed in 1955, this closure caused Yeaw to turn her attention to an area along the American River, known as Deterding Woods, where she began to lead her students on nature tours.

In a creative fashion, Yeaw presented tales of animals with human names and various facts about these creatures of the wild and their environment to children of various ages.

Carmichael resident Sylvia Bringas fondly remembers participating in one of Yeaw's tours at Deterding Woods, which would later become the site of the Effie Yeaw Nature Center.

"Those of us who got to meet (Yeaw) were very lucky," said Bringas, who attended the local Marvin Marshall, Deterding and Carmichael elementary schools at separate times during the 1950s. "She was a teacher at heart trying to impart to us an appreciation of nature and the animals around us. She would take time to explain about each animal and then have us touch each one. I think she really was looking to the future and the preservation of what was around her. You felt her excitement and it made you want to pay attention to what she had to say. As you know we can be very antsy at eight years old. It takes a special person to keep the interest of children. I feel honored to have known her."

Louis Heinrich, Jr., a member of the Effie Yeaw Nature Center's associate board of directors, said that he participated in Yeaw's tours from 1960 to 1965.

"I really remember Effie Yeaw as just this really kind person," said Heinrich, Jr., who attended Marvin Marshall School at 5309 Kenneth Ave. in Carmichael. "(Yeaw's tours) sparked an interest in the natural world that is outside your back door. A lot of people go to national parks and state parks to experience nature, but it's right here (in Carmichael). That's one of the things that Effie Yeaw helped develop in me as a young person is just look around and you'll see (nature) everywhere. We are surrounded by it."

Louis Heinrich, Jr.'s father, Louis Heinrich, Sr., a former biology teacher at Grant

Technical College and later at American River College, which opened in 1955, said that he organized the Deterding Woods tours with Yeaw and another local resident, Mike Weber.

The eldest Heinrich said that in addition to these tours, Yeaw had a dream of having a nature center located in Deterding Woods.

"Another reason why we had these field trips into the Deterding Woods was that (Yeaw) was hoping that the Carmichael School District would obtain some kind of a concession there that they could have it as a nature center," Heinrich, Sr. said. "She was already planning a nature center in that area."

Although Yeaw, who passed away at the age of 69 in 1970, never saw her dream of having a nature center at the Deterding Woods site become a reality, her legacy remains strong through both the name and mission of the Effie Yeaw Nature Center and the people in the community who she influenced through her love of nature.

Jesuit High School Soccer Coach Paul Rose Named NSCAA/Adidas High School Coach of the Year

Special to Pocket News

Paul Rose, Jesuit High School's highly successful soccer coach, was named the 2010 High School Coach of the Year by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America for the third time, more than any other coach in NSCAA history.

Rose led Jesuit's soccer team to an undefeated 30-0 record in 2010, winning both the Delta River League and CIF Sac-Joaquin Section - Division I titles. The team finished second in the NSCAA/Adidas National Fall Boys' Soccer Rankings. Rose has also compiled more soccer wins than any other high school boys' soccer coach in California, ending the season with a career total of 631 wins.

"This is a well-deserved honor for Coach Rose, it signifies the accomplishments of the 2010 team, becoming the winningest soccer coach in California history, and his impact on the sport of soccer throughout the region," said Chris Fahey, director of athletics for Jesuit High School. "Paul has been instrumental in developing life skills that benefit his players well beyond their high school years."

Three Jesuit Seniors have signed letters of intent to play soccer at the collegiate level after graduation. The players include Andrew Mills at Princeton,

'Albie Swingin' For Life' to feature six top NorCal high school baseball teams

Special to Pocket News

The Third Annual Albie Swingin' For Life, a benefit for the Albie Carson Breast Cancer Foundation, will feature six of Northern California's top high school baseball teams on Saturday, April 9, at Sacramento City College.

Five of the six teams are currently ranked by the Sacramento Bee. The sixth team, Dublin High School from the East Bay, is currently ranked No. 5 in the Division II North Coast Section by MaxPreps Sports. Dublin will play No. 4 Franklin of Elk Grove at 12 noon, No. 1 Elk Grove will face off with No. 5 Oak Ridge at 3 p.m., and No. 2 Jesuit will take on No. 18 Christian Brothers at 6 p.m.

"This event was created to showcase some of the best high school baseball in the greater Sacramento area, while raising money for a great cause that affects so many women each year," said Chris Fahey, director of athletics at Jesuit High School. "All players, coaches and umpires will wear pink items during the game, the bases will be painted pink, and breast cancer survivors will throw-out ceremonial first pitches before each game."

Tickets will be sold at the gate and are $8 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens. Children under 5 and breast cancer survivors wearing pink are free.

All proceeds from the event will benefit the Albie Carson Breast Cancer Foundation which was created in memory of Albie Carson who succumbed to breast cancer on July 4, 2002. Albie was a 50-year resident of Sacramento where she attended school, raised a family, and made a career in the real estate community. Last year's event raised over $10,000.
